KATIE PUTNAM.

In presenting the claims of the universal little favorite for public consideration of her merits and the recognition of patronage, we have more to do with the influence of her life on the stage than with the proud eminence she has acquired through her industry in her art, her genius and her intellectuality.

Others there are who have become conspicuous for a season—and we do not refer to their temporary fame for the purpose of disparagement, but for comparison rather—but it has remained for Katie Putnam to embrace all the requirements of the dramatic artist and to preserve through the successive years of her life on the stage a name as stainless as her fame is secure.

She has given to the profession of her adoption a prestige of virtue, of integrity, of worth such as without her blameless life the years of the future would still hold out open arms to. She has rescued it from the obloquy with which it was surrounded, and as a purifying element, cleansed it of its record and made it tenable for the heretofore shrinking genius and talent of this land of ours so fruitful of gifted men and women.

Time was, and it is in the memory of young manhood, when to be associated with the stage was to debar one from the amenities of social intercourse, and to deprive whom society was pleased to look upon as an unfortunate devotee, of all those considerations of humanity which are wont to recognize the human family as of kin. Not so now; and the revolution in public sentiment can be traced more directly to the hallowed influence of this pure little woman's life than to that of any other representative of her art, living or dead.

She deserves a more worthy encomium than the humble friend and admirer of her genius and talent and virtue who pens these lines can bestow. And indeed no panegyric, however lofty, no earthly reward, however great, can do justice to or compensate her for the crown she has won. She may not wear it here but hereafter.

To the cause of humanity she has contributed most liberally; and who shall say that her "Little Nell," her "Fanchon," her "Little Barefoot," has not watered the fountains of pity in hearts that would have long since gone dry, or that her "Marchioness" or "Lena" has not re-animated hearts that would have long since been broken.

The stage owes her a debt that it can never repay, and the public a patronage limited only by the capacity of the houses in which she appears.

Ab, "Little Nell" or "Fanchon" or "Little Barefoot," or better still, Katie Putnam, the heart of the great republic should be grateful to you, for you have often brought the sunshine of life into many of its darkest corners, and made merry with smiles the lips that were not wont to smile, and stirred bosoms with emotions of tenderness, of pity and of love, that erst did harbor no sentiment of these.

ROMANTIC REALITY OF LIFE.

A Montana Miner and the "Little Favorite," Royal Christmas Gift.

With respect to this world's goods the little actress stands well, as the result of her labors, and recently her store has been largely augmented by a somewhat romantic incident, one of many in her interesting history, as the following special from Hot Springs, Ark., to the New York Times will explain:

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., December 21, 1885.—

The Hot Springs papers this afternoon published an account of the sudden wealth of Little Katie Putnam, the celebrated actress, now playing an engagement here. The story runs, that five years ago when she was in Helena, Montana, a miner who had recently discovered what he believed to be a valuable "lead," and who had become captivated in witnessing the performances of the little favorite, sought an introduction and begged the privilege of naming the new mine after her. The request was granted, Miss Putnam assuring him of the honor she felt he had conferred upon her, and leaving that country, the incident passed from memory in the years that succeeded, only to be revived a day or two since by Katie receiving as a Christmas present a beautifully engraved non-assessable certificate of 300 shares of stock in "The Katie Putnam Mining Company, of Helena, Montana." To find out how much truth there was in the published report, your correspondent called upon that little actress at the conclusion of her performance tonight, and in answer to inquiry, was shown the certificate representing 300 shares of paid up non-assessable stock, and signed by James O'Neal, president, and John W. Eddy, secretary of "The Katie Putnam Mining Company, of Helena, Montana."

The capital stock of the company is placed at $300,000, and the mine is said to have recently developed such riches as to make Little Katie's shares run away up into the hundred thousands—in fact, anywhere up to a quarter of a million.

From the indorsements accompanying this certificate it will be sufficient to say that the writer has had and still has the certificate of stock in his possession. This in deference to a sentiment that may be disposed to look upon the incident of Miss Putnam's good fortune as simply an advertisement, although those who know her will readily acquit her of descending to so questionable a method of adding to her reputation.—M. Late Criticisms of "Lena."

Knoxville Chronicle, January 28th, 1886. There was a large and fashionable audience at Staub's theater last night. Katie Putnam seems to draw as well as when she was a rising girl. But for the awful fact that presents itself that the stage is not real, but the misery in a certain sense of real life, we should have believed that Katie was a very girl indeed. Her role as "Lena the Madcap" was a splendid piece of light comedy acting. The character combines just enough pathos with its fun to keep the house from perpetually roaring. Her songs were applauded to the echo and twice she was called before the curtain.

The play is a light comedy of high order, and consequently requires the combined efforts of several good actors.

Mr. James A. Devlin as "Festus Stupe," the negro servant, was good, especially in his recitations. Mr. Emery as "Cloudy Marchioness," Mr. Glassford as "Commodore Hailstorm" may be classed among the best.

Chattanooga Times, January 25th, 1886. And of the largest and most fashionable audience that has assembled at James Hall this season greeted the Katie Putnam Company last night, and a more delighted crowd has not been at the hall. "Lena, the Madcap," is a most exquisite little comedy, sparkling with good humor and brilliant flashes of wit, bubbling over with delicious merriment, and containing sufficient pathos to give it character and dignity. Katie Putnam was at her best, and her performance was one of the most bits of comedy acting we have ever seen on the American stage, and surpasses Lotta in many respects. She is a most captivating and entertaining actress, piquant, yet natural, brimming over with hearty good nature, peerless in comedy, superb in pathos, and matchless in song. The support throughout was excellent, and the performance as a whole was one of the most satisfactory that has been given here this season.

As an Artist.

Boston Sunday Times: "Miss Katie Putnam last night brought her successful engagement to a close, and she made her farewell appearance to a crowded house."

"She has, during her stay in our city, won for herself unending laurels as an artist, and gained a hold upon the good will as well as excited the admiration of our people."

"Miss Putnam's acting is something rare. It is grand in many of its features. It is earnest, enthusiastic, genius-like, and carries with it a power to control an audience. It is unnecessary to judge her by others. She is true to her own genius and powers, and her impersonations not only bear the stamp of a lofty superiority, but they have successfully met the polished criticism of the ablest pens."

A HUMORIST'S ESTIMATE.

The "Danbury News Man" on the Little Favorite.

In response to a personal request, Mr. Bailey, the celebrated "Danbury News Man" wrote to Miss Putnam's representative as follows:

"Dear Sir: I cheerfully comply with your request for my opinion of the artistic merits of Miss Katie Putnam. I can say, as is so evident to all, that her acting is artistic without being unnatural; rollicking without being offensive; sentimental without mawkishness. She is observant of human nature, faithful to every detail, and going into the piece with a true conception of the character, she combines every excellence and achieves remarkable success."

"She demonstrates beyond cavil that her genius is of the highest order."

"Everybody in Danbury who saw Miss Putnam at the opera house was delighted with her, and already we are looking forward for her return. I know of no actress who has given the satisfaction and pleasure Miss Putnam did on her visit here."

Yours sincerely,
J. M. BAILEY.

Home Opinions.

Governor H. D. McDaniel: "I have seen her several times and was delighted. I will go tomorrow night."

Mr. P. H. Snook: "She has been at all times a charming actress and I hear she is even growing better. She is a favorite of mine."

Mr. John Stevens: "She is an illustrious little woman and a painstaking actress. I will take my family."

Joel Chandler Harris: "Put me down for two matinee tickets." (To anybody who knows "Joe Harris" this is quite as estimable a compliment as the little lady could receive, as Mr. Harris rarely attends dramatic performances.) Her representative assures him that his intention to witness her performance will be cordially appreciated, as in his "Uncle Remus" she has often found such delight as to will please her to endeavor to impart to him and his in her representations.

Mr. L. W. Scoville: "Oh, yes; I have seen her, and like her."

This means a good deal from Mr. Scoville, whose reticence is proverbial.

Ed Callaway: "She's a queen—a star of the first magnitude, and if there is anything brighter than that, why, she's it."

A lady at the Kimball house elevator, when Miss Putnam's name was mentioned: "Bless her little soul! I have seen her often, in 'Little Nell' and in 'Fanchon,' and I am going to see her again."

Bradley: "She's a little darling, and don't you forget it."

Nobody who knows "Brad" would be guilty of a suspicion that he would say anything else. It is high art criticism—according to Bradley.

Captain R. J. Lowry: "I am delighted to hear that she is prospering, and am the more gratified at her success because she has an Atlanta man associated with her. I will take pleasure in going to see her."

A similarity of opinion among all who have ever seen the little artist renders further quotations unnecessary. Suffice it that the unanimous verdict is one of unqualified praise, and this, the probable last engagement of the little favorite before leaving for Europe will doubtless be made a memorable one.

Theatricals Next Week.

This week will be a memorable one for our theatre goers. Among the attractions two great stars will appear on our stage, each in a masterpiece of the famous French dramatist, Victorien Sardou. The first to appear will be Danish Countess Arco, in Princess Andrea, Tuesday night and Wednesday, matinee, closing Wednesday night in family. The second will be Fanny Davenport, in Fedora, Thursday night, only one performance. The first is a great Austrian actress; the second a great American one, both are in the fullness of their talent and of success, and admirable artists besides most charming women.

French played in Albany, New York, December 7th, and the Albany Argus gave her flattering notices as follows:

After evening she began her third engagement at the Leland in Sardou's "Andrea" before a large and cultured audience. Her residence in this country and constant study have given her greater familiarity with the language. She retains her power with true comprehension of their subtle meanings. She is surrounded by a carefully selected company of recognized artists, each one of whom is well fitted to the part he is called upon to assume.

Fedora, Fanny Davenport's Famous Play.

The management take great pleasure in announcing the engagement next Thursday evening of Fanny Davenport, who will appear at the theatre in her famous characterisation of "Fedora".

The piece was originally brought out at the Comedie Francaise in Paris, with Bernhardt in the title role, where for months it was the talk of the town. "Fedora" was then translated and produced at the Haymarket, London, where it created a furore in theatrical circles. It remained, however, for Fanny Davenport, who justly considered America's representative actress, to introduce the play in the United States. Miss Davenport, three years ago purchased the American right from the author for $15,000, and in October, 1884, made her first appearance at the Fourteenth street theatre, New York, in the title role. The play made an instantaneous hit, and the engagement was extended week by week until it lengthened into months, and even then it appeared impossible to satisfy the appetite of theatre goers for "Fedora". Miss Davenport has, during the past two years, produced "Fedora" in every city of the country, and the unanimous verdict has been a magnificent success. The play will be presented with original New York cast, including Mr. R. B. Mansell, and with new and elegant costumes, scenery and accessories.
